CAPITOL HILL BLUE'S Doug Thompson had written the definitive piece on Bill Clinton and his sexual assaults. He talked about a young woman in England named Eileen Wellstone.

According to Thompson's research, the reason that Clinton did not finish his studies at Oxford was that he was removed from the school and the country. The reason was his sexual assault on Eileen Wellstone whom he had met in a pub. Thompson claims to have verified the information from a State Department employee who had known the circumstances in the case.

We were all disgusted by Sinkmaster's continued denials and many of us became physically ill reading the so-called interview with Jonathon "Kneepads" Alter. Sinkmaster still blames the right wing for his troubles and is still telling his foolish minions that there was nothing to Whitewater and nothing to the Paula Jones lawsuit. He sites the totally discredited and increasing bizarre David Brock.

There should be some way to confirm the Wellstone story for ourselves. Someone with knowledge needs to come forward and tell his story if we are ever going to shut up the NOW cows and the true believers.

Where do we start? Can we get a list of classmates who knew him? Will someone from the State Department go on record?

Some of you might remember that the Sinkmaster Scum Team was screaming in 1992 when George Bush was supposedly looking into the records of Sinkmaster's passport. There was apparently information that three pages from his passport were missing.

If we can get people on the record with direct information from the Oxford days, we can nail Hillary as an enabler who covered up her husband's sexual assaults and was behind destroying people who could testify. We have to do this now, not after she is nominated by the RATS for the presidency. By then it will be too late. Given the choice between voting for a Republican or a RAT, the RAT groups will stick with her just like they stuck with Sinkmaster. Our nation may not survive another Clinton in our White House.

Give us your ideas please.

TOPICS: Activism/Chapters; Crime/Corruption
KEYWORDS: bootedfromengland; oxford; sexualassault; x42
2 posted on 4/4/2002, 7:52:26 PM by doug from upland

To: doug from upland

The stench that never goes away... Bill Clinton.

3 posted on 4/4/2002, 7:57:26 PM by Libertina

To: doug from upland

Great links but only one works. Sorry.

4 posted on 4/4/2002, 7:57:47 PM by Check6

To: doug from upland

DFU--I think that there was also some sexual assault at Yale and the campus security guards were involved. I'll bet that Hitchens or one of the other European writers who took on Clinton (wasn't there an Evans-Pritchard-Ambrose [name confusion] guy who had the goods on Clinton too?). Did Alamo Girl catalogue stories from the British press?

5 posted on 4/4/2002, 7:57:58 PM by foreshadowed at waco

To: doug from upland

Didn't one of Slick Willie's former Oxford roommates commit 'suicide' as an adult? Possibly the only Rhodes scholar to ever do so...

6 posted on 4/4/2002, 7:59:54 PM by Fred Mertz

To: doug from upland

Yes, had trouble with the links. No go.

7 posted on 4/4/2002, 8:02:38 PM by thegreatbeast

To: doug from upland

All the President's victims II:

More on Bill Clinton's long history of sexual violence against women

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Two weeks, Capitol Hill Blue first published an account of more than a dozen women who have reported being either assaulted or raped by Bill Clinton over the last 30 years. Since that story was first published, Juanita Broaddrick, one of the women mentioned in this story, has gone public with an interview and two other victims have given us permission to use their names. The updated story appears below)

By Daniel J. Harris

& Teresa Hampton

Capitol Hill Blue

Juanita Broaddrick's terrifying story of a violent rape by Bill Clinton is only one of more than a dozen cases of sexual assault by the President that go back 30 years.

Capitol Hill Blue has confirmed that the charge is but one of many allegations of sexual assault by the President.
A five month investigation into the President's questionable sexual history reveal incidents that go back as far as Clinton's college days, with more than a dozen women claiming his sexual appetites leave little room for the word "no."

Juanita Broaddrick, an Arkansas woman who worked on Bill Clinton's campaign when he was attorney general, told NBC's Lisa Meyers two weeks ago she was raped by Clinton. NBC, under intense pressure by the White House, shelved the interview. The White House also threatened Fox News Tuesday after it reported the story. Broaddrick finally took her story to The Wall Street Journal, which published her account of the brutal rape at the hands of the future President.

But Broaddrick's story is only one account of many sexual assaults by Clinton. Among the other incidents:

- A 1969 charge by a Eileen Wellstone, 19-year-old English woman who said Clinton assaulted her after she met him at a pub near the Oxford University campus where the future President was a student. A retired State Department employee, who asked not to be identified, confirmed this week that he spoke with the family of the girl and filed a report with his superiors. Clinton admitted having sex with the girl, but claimed it was consensual. The victim's family declined to pursue the case;
- In 1972, a 22-year-old woman told campus police at Yale University that she was sexually assaulted by Clinton, who was a law student at the college. No charges were filed, but retired campus policemen contacted by Capitol Hill Blue confirmed the incident;
- In 1974, a female student at the University of Arkansas complained that then-law professor Bill Clinton tried to prevent her from leaving his office during a conference. She said he groped her and forced his hand inside her blouse. Clinton claimed the student "came on" to him and she left the school shortly after the incident. Several former students at the University have confirmed the incident in confidential interviews;
- Broaddrick, a volunteer in Clinton's attorney general campaign, said he raped her in 1978;
- From 1978-1980, during Clinton's first term as governor of Arkansas, state troopers assigned to protect the governor reported seven complaints from women who said Clinton forced, or attempted to force, himself on them sexually. One retired state trooper said in an interview that the common joke among those assigned to protect Clinton was "who's next?";
- Elizabeth Ward, the Miss Arkansas who won the Miss America crown in 1982, told friends she was forced by Clinton to have sex with him shortly after she won her state crown. Last year, Ward, who is now married with the last name of Gracen, told an interviewer she did have sex with Clinton but said it was consensual. She later recanted that interview and said she had been threatened by Clinton supporters into claiming the sex was consensual.
- Paula Corbin, an Arkansas state worker, filed a sexual harassment case against Clinton after an encounter in a Little Rock hotel room where the then-governor exposed himself and demanded oral sex. Clinton settled the case with Jones recently with a cash payment.
- Sandra Allen James, a former Washington, DC, political fundraiser says Presidential candidate-to-be Clinton invited her to his hotel room during a political trip to the nation's capital in 1991, pinned her against the wall and stuck his hand up her dress. She says she screamed loud enough for the Arkansas State Trooper stationed outside the hotel suite to bang on the door and ask if everything was all right, at which point Clinton released her and she fled the room. When she reported the incident to her boss, he advised her to keep her mouth shut if she wanted to keep working. Miss James has since married and left Washington.
- Kathleen Willey, a White House volunteer, reported that Clinton grabbed her, fondled her breast and pressed her hand against his genitals during an Oval Office meeting in November, 1993. Willey, who told her story in a 60 Minutes interview, became a target of a White House-directed smear campaign after she went public.

In an interview with Capitol Hill Blue this week, the retired State Department employee said he believed the story Miss Wellstone, the young English woman who said Clinton raped her in 1969.

"There was no doubt in my mind that this young woman had suffered severe emotional trauma," he said. "But we were under tremendous pressure to avoid the embarrassment of having a Rhodes Scholar charged with rape. I filed a report with my superiors and that was the last I heard of it."
Miss Wellstone, who is now married and lives in London, confirmed the incident when contacted this week, but refused to discuss the matter further.

_Capitol Hill Blue_ also spoke with the former Miss James, the Washington fundraiser who confirmed the incident, but first said she would not go public because anyone who does so is destroyed by the Clinton White House.

"My husband and children deserve better than that," she said when first contacted two weeks ago. After reading the Broaddrick story Friday, however, she called and gave permission to use her maiden name.

The other encounters were confirmed with more than 30 interviews with retired Arkansas state employees, former state troopers and former Yale and University of Arkansas students. Like others, they refused to go public because of fears of retaliation from the Clinton White House.

Likewise, the mainstream media has shied away from the Broaddrick story. Initially, only _The Drudge Report_ and other Internet news sites have actively pursued it.

The White House did not return calls for comment.

---

8 posted on 4/4/2002, 8:14:44 PM by doug from upland
[Post Reply | Private Reply | To 1 | View Replies]

To: foreshadowed at waco

I don't know if she catalogue those.

---

9 posted on 4/4/2002, 8:16:18 PM by doug from upland
[Post Reply | Private Reply | To 5 | View Replies]

To: Fred Mertz

Editorial Reviews From Kirkus Reviews

In a memoir on an uncharacteristically somber subject, Trillin (American Stories, 1991, etc.) traces the life of his college friend Roger ""Denny"" Hansen: Phi Beta Kappa, Rhodes Scholar, possessor of charm and good looks to spare--and, at age 55, a suicide victim. Denny had seemed such a golden boy that he was photographed by Alfred Eisenstaedt for a Life feature on his 1957 graduation from Yale, and his classmates joked about serving in his cabinet when he became President. But life didn't work out that way. Drained of his confidence at Oxford, unable to enter the Foreign Service as he had desired, Denny (now known as ""Roger"" to new acquaintances) fell into a succession of jobs as an itinerant foreign-policy specialist before becoming a professor of international relations at Johns Hopkins's School of Advanced International Studies. In his last years, old friends were puzzled by his broken dinner engagements and unreturned phone calls; new associates found him an unsmiling, moralistic nag who never quite fit in. Why did Denny finally kill himself? Because of unbearable back pain (as implied by a suicide note), a dead-end academic specialty, lack of family or loved ones, long-repressed homosexuality--or, as one friend noted, simply because he was ""depressed all of his life""? After searching for the point of no return in his old friend's life, Trillin wisely settles for no easy conclusions (""Roger would have said that you didn't know him at all,"" one lover of Denny's remarks--with which Trillin ruefully agrees). What makes this gloomy post-mortem bearable and even fascinating is a smattering of Trillin's one-liners, as well as shrewd observations on sexual orientation, changes in universities' demographics, and American attitudes toward success. Perhaps more appropriate as one of Trillin's shorter New Yorker pieces--but, still, a fine meditation on one life's aborted promise, the crippling burden of anticipated success, and the mysteries of the human heart.

10 posted on 4/4/2002, 8:21:06 PM by doug from upland
[Post Reply | Private Reply | To 6 | View Replies]

To: doug from upland

Klinton bump.

[Post Reply | Private Reply | To 8 | View Replies]